

VETERANS DAY

...a Day for Those who Survive to Honor Those who did not

EDITORIAL

Remember Your Vets At Least Once A Year

Forty-seven years ago, a group of men met in a railroad dining car, in the Forest of Compiègne, France, and signed a truce ending World War I. The date was Nov. 11, 1918.

In the years that passed, other men have met and signed truces ending wars in which thousands have died. Those who survived will never forget their experiences.

Every year, countless men and women all over the world, young and old, pause a moment of recollection and silent prayer at 11 a.m., Nov. 11.

In the United States we know this day as Veterans Day and we hold commemorative services at the Tomb of the Unknowns in Arlington National Cemetery. In England, their dead are honored in front of the Cenotaph in London and in France, at the Arch of Triumph in Paris.

This is the day on which everyone remembers. Those of us now in service have our memories also. We honor our comrades in arms in various ways. Many of us take part in memorial services in the air and on land and sea.

There are some of us who, this year, may be too busy to pause and pray, for we will be fighting yet another action, many miles from our homeland.

And there may be some of us who will be remembered at this time next year.

But no matter where or how we spend the day of Nov. 11, 1965, we should remember why those before us have passed on. The causes of the past are the same as the causes of today—to preserve and protect the freedoms that we so very much enjoy.

We do not want to live under a dictatorship, monarchy or communism. We enjoy the form of government that has been in this country since its birth. We want those who come after us to enjoy that same freedom and consequently, we have to fight and sometimes die to preserve it.

This year, when we pause at 11 a.m., Nov. 11, remember the past, think of the present and plan for tomorrow. (AFPS)

Chaplain's Corner

by Chaplain Alfred R. Saeger, Jr.

One frequently forgets that incidental experiences may be of an eternal order. Many of us often become discouraged because it is difficult for us to discover tangible and valuable results from our work. We do not wish our lives to be insignificant or to suffer defeat.

In our Lord's parable of the talents are these words of promise to these who are faithful to the trusts of life committed to them: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things." This, of course, is a statement of a law of increasing returns, which may and does operate in two ways.

First it applies to one's personal life. Demonstrated ability and trustworthiness bring satisfaction and confidence in one's self, increasing our capacity for greater responsibilities and justify larger trusts. Second, one's influence does not cease with the human terminal point of death, but extends over many generations and centuries.

In Exodus chapter two the story of Miriam, the little sister of the child Moses, gives us an unusual and graphic illustration of personal worth, and of permanent and expanding influence. As the little girl lingered near the river she was apparently doing nothing, but actually her work surpassed that of the sentinels of the guard.

First, Miriam was alert to the dangers that threatened a helpless child, and so allayed the anxiety of a troubled mother's heart. She was quick to exercise the diplomacy of love, and thus she saved her little brother's life. Moreover, by her faithfulness she was watching over the integrity of her own life; she was faithful to the simple duty assigned her, and thus she developed a spirit which in later years burst forth in her songs of triumph.

Second, destiny rested in the palm of her little hand. The little girl did not realize that she was safeguarding one who would become one of the world's greatest organizers, legislators, and leaders of men, and most of all a peer among interpreters of God to mankind. She held the key with which the shackles of slavery would be removed from more than a million of her race.

She had in her charge a great people, including not only Moses, but Jeremiah, Isaiah, Ezekiel, David, Paul and a host of others, who throughout the long centuries, have given the world their spiritual and scientific leadership. The Pharaohs built great structures of stone; Miriam helped erect eternal, living pyramids in the mind and heart of mankind. Little things do count, especially to our Lord.
